	This documentary features compelling testimonies of four people and their families from Central Java and Bali, two regions heavily affected by the killings. As they break their silence publicly for the first time, each family provides an intimate and frightening look at what it was like for survivors of the mass killings. In chilling detail, they describe the events of 1965 through their own experiences; reliving and reflecting upon the stigmatization and brutalization that they continue to endure on both the village and state levels. Over time, the survivors and their families attempt to find ways to deal with a tragedy that was not openly recognized by their neighbors, government or the world.
